NAVIGANT CONSULTING AND THE CALIFORNIA SUSTAINABILITY ALLIANCE LAUNCH GREEN LEASES TOOLKIT

Sacramento, CA — April 30, 2008 — Navigant Consulting, Inc. (NYSE: NCI) announced the release of a "Green Leases Tool Kit" designed to help both owners and tenants of commercial real estate overcome barriers to "greening" leased office space. The Tool Kit was developed with the assistance of real estate industry experts through the California Sustainability Alliance. The Alliance is an innovative market transformation program managed by Navigant Consulting and administered by Southern California Gas Company (SoCalGas).

"Office buildings represent a large untapped opportunity for significant savings of energy, water and waste," said Craig McDonald, Managing Director of Navigant Consulting's Sustainability Services. "In California, about 90 percent of office space is leased, yet only 6 percent of that space is certified 'green.' Until now, much of the effort to green office space has focused primarily on new construction."

The California Sustainability Alliance brought together key representatives from market leaders such as Bank of America, J.P. Morgan, C.B. Richard Ellis, Thomas Properties Group, and Fireman's Fund Insurance Co. to work alongside Governor Schwarzenegger's Green Action Team in an effort to design strategies for greening leased office space. One of the results of this unprecedented collaboration is the Green Leases Tool Kit, which provides a framework for owners and tenants to work together in reducing the environmental footprint of their facilities. These strategies provide operating cost savings, enhanced productivity, a healthy environment, and increased asset values.

"Our clients are very interested in greening their leased space but face considerable barriers," added Sean Ivery, a Director with Navigant Consulting's Real Estate consulting practice. "The Tool Kit provides practical advice and tools that will help tenants and landlords develop and implement technologies and policies that support sustainable office environments. The unique combination of our Company's energy and real estate industry expertise was a key factor in facilitating the involvement of targeted stakeholders and driving the development of the Green Leases Tool Kit."

David Blanke, SoCalGas' new construction manager who has been working with The Alliance, echoed these statements.

"We have known for many years that leased office buildings represent high potential energy savings for California, but the natural barriers created by typical leasing arrangements – in which owners need to make the investments that would reduce tenants' energy bills – have been very difficult to overcome. I am excited that we now have willing participation of all parties to leasing arrangements sitting at the table to find effective solutions. The responses we have received from the real estate industry and tenants are very encouraging."
